Instructions for Contributors

►JOURNALISM QUARTERLY welcomes original contributions from any author, but it is important that a prospective contributor be aware of the focus of this journal and our requirements for manuscripts.

This journal is "devoted to research in journalism and mass communication." This means we are seeking reports of original investigations into any area of mass communication. It also means that an attempt to discover or develop new information about mass communication must be the central purpose of the research. The researcher's method is important only in terms of its suitability for the study he undertakes. We have accepted and will continue to accept articles using a wide variety of methodological approaches. The diversity of the field of mass communication seems to require that we do. Our emphasis on research does mean that we do not normally accept essays.

All manuscripts submitted are considered for publication. The author's membership in the Association for Education in Journalism or lack of it is not a factor in selection. Members of the Editorial Advisory Board review manuscripts and advise the editor. That review is anonymous. The reviewer does not know the identity of the author. A manuscript is accepted with the understanding that JOURNALISM QUARTERLY has exclusive publication rights, which means that the manuscript has not been submitted, accepted for publication or published elsewhere. Copyright considerations make this mandatory for JOURNALISM QUARTERLY as a copyrighted publication.

Manuscript Preparation

Articles intended for JOURNALISM QUARTERLY should be submitted in the form of double-spaced original and two copies. Any legible form of copies is acceptable.

Most authors use a title page. This is normally followed by the text, footnotes, tables and graphs. The text should not be longer than 14 pages. Note that we use footnotes, not references. Prospective authors should consult a current issue with regard to footnote style and table style and format. Additional style details can be found in the JOURNALISM QUARTERLY Style Book and Author's Guide for Scholarly Writing, which is part of the Spring 1965 issue.

The author should provide material for an identifying note which appears at the foot of the first page of the article. This note may include acknowledgements for financial assistance, advice, access to special materials etc. If your article is based on a dissertation or has been presented orally, these facts should be mentioned in the note.

Organization

An article should begin with a clear statement of the problem followed by a statement of hypotheses or research questions. Methods of collecting information or data should be explained next, to the extent that the particular study requires. If the method is obvious, as is usually the case in an historical or legal article, no elaboration is called for. The author should strive to provide enough detail about method that the person who wants to replicate the study can do so. The results section should come next. It is important that the results be explained in terms of the hypotheses or research questions. Interpretation of results should be reserved for the discussion or conclusions section, which comes next. A summary or summary and conclusions comes last.
